Child Therapy During Divorce

THURSDAY · AUGUST 20, 2026

POST COPY

This week on Donuts and Divorce, Dorothy talks with Dr. Allyson Casey-Jovanovich about child therapy during family change.

Kids rely on structure and routine. When one home becomes two, that rhythm can feel interrupted. Big feelings are allowed. A calm conversation can help you decide if extra support fits.

FROM EPISODE 58

Keep one small thing the same.

When a family is changing, ordinary time helps children feel safe.

FAMILY FRIDAY

Kids Need Room to Feel the Change

A quiet evening at home can matter more than a packed weekend plan.

- ✓ Keep one small routine the same in both homes.
- ✓ Let kids have questions without rushing the answers.
- ✓ Celebrate ordinary time, not a perfect schedule.
- ✓ A familiar meal or ten quiet minutes can be enough.

Steady moments help children feel safe during family change.

POST COPY

A quiet evening at home can matter more than a packed weekend plan.

When a family is changing, small steady moments help children feel safe:

- Keep one small routine the same in both homes.
- Let kids have questions without rushing the answers.
- Celebrate ordinary time, not a perfect schedule.

There is no prize for a perfect Friday. A familiar meal, a short walk, or ten quiet minutes together can be enough.

FROM EPISODE 58

Ask before you guess.

You do not need every answer before you ask for guidance.

SATURDAY SOLUTIONS

Questions to Bring Before Child Therapy

A short list can make the first conversation feel less overwhelming.

- 1 What will sessions look like for my child?
- 2 How are parents involved without putting kids in the middle?
- 3 What signs suggest extra support may help?
- 4 These questions are for learning, not for building a court strategy.

Every child and every family is different.

Questions to Bring Before Child Therapy

SATURDAY · AUGUST 22, 2026

POST COPY

If you are thinking about child therapy, you do not need every answer before you ask for guidance. A short list can make the first conversation feel less overwhelming.

Consider asking:

What will sessions look like for my child?

How are parents involved without putting kids in the middle?

What signs suggest extra support may help?

These questions are for learning, not for building a court strategy. Every child and every family is different.

EDIT NOTES

Dorothy asked for social posts for Donuts and Divorce episode 58 and offered a talking-head video. That file was not attached. Her auto-reply says she is out until Tuesday, August 25.

This cut uses the published episode audio from 6:55 to 7:40, where Dr. Casey-Jovanovich talks about structure, one home becoming two, and big feelings. The picture is the official Donuts and Divorce cover with a slow move, three caption cards, and a branded end card. No illustrated characters.

File: video/BOK-Turn-the-Page-Thursday-Ep58-teaser.mp4 (1080x1920, 49s).

Post with the Thursday caption and the Buzzsprout link. Tease the listen. Do not recap the whole episode in the caption.

Do not publish the video until Dorothy or Rachael has watched it. If the talking-head file arrives later, this teaser can be replaced.
